3.0 FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS

None.

4.0 MAIN TEXT

- 4.1 In 2017 the Scottish Government published 'Health and Social Care Standards: My support, my life' under section 50 of the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 and section 10H of the National Health Services (Scotland) Act 1978. The standards replace the previous National Care Standards published in 2002. They do not replace or remove the need for health, social care and social work services to comply with legislation but are designed to complement relevant legislation and best practice. The new standards have been informed by knowledge gained from inspections and complaints investigations but also by the views of people experiencing care and extensive public consultation.
- 4.2 All services and support organisations, whether a registered service or not, are encouraged to use the guidelines to support them to improve, develop flexible services and innovate. The new standards will apply to all parts of the care system across health care, social care, early learning and childcare, and social work; meaning they will have a far wider impact and apply to many more people's experiences of care than the previous 2002 National Care Standards.
- 4.3 The standards set out what people can expect when using health, social care or social work services in Scotland. They aim to support the delivery of better outcomes for people, ensure that individuals are treated with dignity and respect and that their human rights are upheld. The standards contain five headline outcome statements:
 - I experience high quality care and support that is right for me.
 - I am fully involved in all decisions about my care and support.
 - I have confidence in the people who support and care for me.
 - I have confidence in the organisation providing my care and support.
 - I experience a high quality environment if the organisation provides the premises.

Each headline outcome is supplemented by a set of descriptive statements (of which there are 146 in total), contained in full in appendix 1, which explains what achieving the outcome looks like in practice. It is recognised that not every descriptor will apply to every service. In addition, the standards are underpinned by five principles that reflect the way in which everyone should be treated: dignity and respect, compassion, be included, responsive care, and support and wellbeing.

- 4.4 The new standards are relevant across planning, assessment, commissioning and delivery. The new standards have been aligned to sector specific standards and guidance, such as Healthcare Improvement Scotland's clinical standards and the sector specific guidance issued by the Care Inspectorate. Increasingly there will be a focus on issuing integrated guidance where this is relevant, such as the recent joint guidance from Healthcare Improvement Scotland and the Care Inspectorate on good practice regarding pressure ulcers.
- 4.5 From 1 April 2018 the standards will be taken into account by the Care Inspectorate, Healthcare Improvement Scotland and other scrutiny bodies in relation to inspections and registration of health and care services. It is intended that the standards will support a change of regulatory culture; encouraging a move away from policing compliance with a minimum baseline to a more collaborative approach to continuous improvement within and across services. It is recognised that this will require a different approach to inspection which promotes collaborative working with providers, staff and people experiencing care and has a focus on observing the quality of relationships and discussing how care is being provided and experienced.
- 4.6 Healthcare Improvement Scotland has indicated that there will be a phased roll-out of the updated inspection methodology in 2018, starting with secondary healthcare settings and independent hospitals. It is their intention to take a quality of care approach with a consistent core methodology and a set of tools that can adapt to the scale and topic of scrutiny. Part of the assurance function will include assessment of whether providers have in place robust processes for implementing the standards and for self-evaluating their provision against them. This approach places a strong emphasis on supporting continuous quality improvement and building supportive improvement-focused relationships with service providers. It will also assess factors such as service sustainability, organisational culture and leadership.
- 4.7 The Care Inspectorate also intends to take a phased approach to the incorporation of the standards into their inspection methodology. Consideration is currently being given to whether existing themes and grades used for inspection require to be amended and will consult before introducing any revisions to current arrangements. A new inspection methodology, informed by the new standards, is currently being tested within care homes for older people. The standards will be considered in relation to strategic inspections of how public bodies plan and commission care, as well as inspections of care services.
- 4.8 The Dundee Health and Social Care Partnership will work through the Clinical, Care & Professional Governance Group with Healthcare Improvement Scotland and the Care Inspectorate to consider how changes in their methodologies require to be incorporated into local self-evaluation and quality assurance activities. This will include activities such as raising awareness of the standards across the workforce and incorporating relevant outcome and descriptive statements into case file auditing and other self-evaluation tools.

Health and Social Care Standards

My support, my life

Scottish Government

I am delighted to be able to introduce the new Health and Social Care Standards and commend all of the hard work that has gone into creating these new, human rights based Standards.

The new Standards are wide reaching, flexible and focussed on the experience of people using services and supporting their outcomes. One of the major changes to these Standards is that they will now be applicable to the NHS, as well as services registered with the Care Inspectorate and Healthcare Improvement Scotland.

Everyone is entitled to high quality care and support tailored towards their particular needs and choices. This might be in a hospital; a care home; a children's nursery; or within their own home. Each and every one of us at some point in our lives will use or know someone who uses a health or social care service. These Standards are therefore hugely important to ensure that everyone in Scotland receives the care and support that is right for them.

I would like to thank everyone across the health and social care sectors involved in creating these Standards. You have worked hard to make them innovative and aspirational. Contributions from professional bodies, people who use services, service providers, private and third sector organisations, have created Standards that are applicable to a wide range of health and social care services.

Moving forward, there is still work to be done to ensure that the Standards are implemented successfully. We will support health and care providers, commissioners of services and inspection agencies to ensure a full understanding of what is required to meet the Standards and improve levels of care and support in Scotland.

Introduction

These Health and Social Care Standards (the Standards) set out what we should expect when using health, social care or social work services in Scotland. They seek to provide better outcomes for everyone; to ensure that individuals are treated with respect and dignity, and that the basic human rights we are all entitled to are upheld.

The objectives of the Standards are to drive improvement, promote flexibility and encourage innovation in how people are cared for and supported. All services and support organisations, whether registered or not, should use the Standards as a guideline for how to achieve high quality care.

Why have these Standards been developed?

The standards and outcomes set out in the Standards are published in exercise of the Scottish Ministers' powers under section 50 of the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 and section 10H of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978. They do not replace previous standards and outcomes relating to healthcare that have already been produced under section 10H of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 but they will replace the National Care Standards, published in 2002 under section 5 of the Regulation of Care (Scotland) Act 2001.

From 1 April 2018 the Standards will be taken into account by the Care Inspectorate, Healthcare Improvement Scotland and other scrutiny bodies in relation to inspections, and registration, of health and care services.

What are the Standards?

Throughout this document, 'standards' is used as a collective term to describe both the headline outcomes, and the descriptive statements which set out the standard of care a person can expect. The headline outcomes are:

- 1: I experience high quality care and support that is right for me.
- 2: I am fully involved in all decisions about my care and support.
- 3: I have confidence in the people who support and care for me.
- 4: I have confidence in the organisation providing my care and support.
- 5: I experience a high quality environment if the organisation provides the premises.

The descriptive statements, set out after each headline outcome, explain what achieving the outcome looks like in practice. Not every descriptor will apply to every service.

The Standards are underpinned by five principles: dignity and respect, compassion, be included, responsive care, and support and wellbeing. The principles themselves are not standards or outcomes but rather reflect the way that everyone should expect to be treated.

Who are these Standards for?

The Standards are for everyone. Irrespective of age or ability, we are all entitled to the same high quality care and support. The Care Inspectorate and Healthcare Improvement Scotland will take into account the Standards when carrying out their inspections and quality assurance functions, and when making decisions about care and health services which are, or are applying to be, registered. Our aim is that non-registered services also use the Standards as a guideline for how to achieve high quality care. The Standards can be applied to a diverse range of services from child-minding and daycare for children in their early years, housing support and care at home for adults, to hospitals, clinics and care homes.

The Standards do not replace or remove the need to comply with legislation which sets out requirements for the provision of services. Health and care services will continue to follow existing legislative requirements and best practice guidance which apply to their particular service or sector, in addition to applying the Standards. The Standards should be used to complement the relevant legislation and best practice that support health and care services to ensure high quality care and continuous improvement. Current best practice guidance can be found on the Care Inspectorate and Healthcare Improvement Scotland websites.
